Insurance Lawyers Red Deer - You are qualified to file a suit if an insurance company violates the terms of a written contract. However, the courts would normally only force the insurance company to pay the amounts owed in accordance to the contract.

Nonetheless, if the insurance company has deliberately delayed or withheld payments you can be qualified for extra-contractual damages. These can be granted because of the insurance company ignoring or fabricating proof as well as providing a partial investigation of your claim. The damages awarded consist of costs like for example compensation for mental suffering and interest payments and the loss of RRSPs. Punitive and exemplary damages are granted when insurance firms show specially malicious conduct.
