

Red Deer Divorce

Red Deer Divorce - All through divorce proceedings, property rights are determined by Part 1 and Part II of the Family Law Act. The value of the house itself and the way it is divided is specifically dealt with by Part II, whilst Part I deals with the rest of the assets. Only people who have entered into a legal marriage are eligible to take advantage of these laws. Couples of the same sex who are legally married are also part of this grouping.

Property that has been accrued throughout the marriage is the only property that is eligible to be divided. "Equalization" is the procedure that is utilized so as to divide the values evenly amongst the spouses. All through this process, the value for each person's net family property is calculated. The spouse with the lower net family property value gets half of the difference between their net family properties.

In this case, the term "property" refers to everything purchased by the individual in addition to all the registered things. In the case where something is registered under both spouse's names, the value is divided evenly between the two.

In order to decide who receives the furniture and kitchen appliances, it is normally up to the spouses. To have to lawyers determine who should receive what would cost much more than the value of the furniture itself.
