

Divorce Lawyer in Red Deer

Divorce Lawyer in Red Deer - There are a few distinct levels of court in British Columbia, each of which handles a different aspect of family law.

Both the Provincial Family Court and the Supreme Court, interim orders for access, child support and custody could be acquired. Usually, these orders are acquired at the onset of the case, while remaining active until the procedures have ended. Usually, an interim order is granted for one spouse to have complete ownership of a particular family asset. Thus, the person is ordered to either maintain possession of it or to sell the possession.

Family cases could unfortunately take several months to close, even with all the efforts of the Provincial Family Court and the Supreme court.